Quirky Explanation

This page is the odds and bobs I've found that appeal to me on some level. Whether I find them fun, interesting, useful, thought provoking or something else all together, some part of my crow brain found value in keeping these and now sharing them with you. I hope you enjoy. If not that's ok too. Different strokes for different folks and all that. And remember I'm just a person on the internet, please always do your own research!

Táin Bó Cuailnge

On the next page, Wishlist (Flight Plans?), you'll see one of the places I have listed is Rathcroghan. In the description, quoted from the Rathcroghan visitor page (pare down???), you'll see the Táin Bó Cuailnge, or Cattle Raid of Cooley (sp?) referenced. While I heard of Rathcroghan last year, I've only started learning more about it, the surrounding area and the Táin more recently and mostly through the youtube page, blog and Irish Pagan School of Lora O'Brien. Linked below is a reading of the Táin Bó Cuailnge, with some commentary. It is an ongoing work, and labour of love for (get discription for Lora), meaning it may not be complete by the time you see this page. If you are curious to read ahead the sources are shared. I hope you enjoy, and if you do please check out the other stuff on Lora's pages, and you know, the regular youtube stuff of liking and sharing.

Future Learn

One of the more positive side effects of the socially-distant, stay-home, culture that has developed in response to the Covid crisis is the increased ability to access things online, and the highlighting of things that were already there. Many of these at low costs or free. One of the ones I found was Future Learn. Because I'm currently in a new area with a unique culture and language that differs from what I've always known, I had seeked out places to learn more and was recommended Irish 101: An Introduction to Irish Language and Culture course. This course is free from Dublin City University through Future Learn. <https://www.futurelearn.com/courses/irish-language>. Don't forget to check out what else is on offer there, it changes frequently.
